Just wanted you to know that I just got a call from the majority counsel on the Subcommittee who said that Chairwoman Collins would like to mark up the bill soon and that he would hope there could be a "consensus between the industry and Moakley" develop. In your spare time (!) could you guys try to get a read from RJR. They obviously have been pushing a 'voluntary' compliance option, whatever that means, and therefore will want to fight this bill I think. But it would be helpful to know from the top.

Whidby will have a remake of the 1987 prototype by next Thursday and will test it. Also, I asked him to draft a letter from Campbell to Moakley further explaining the 1987 memo just for 'due diligence' (since we seem to be doing alot of that these days).
